RANDOLPH, Isham:

The subject of this sketch, the son of Robert Carter Randolph, M.D., and Lucy Nelson, his wife, was born March 25, 1848, on his father's farm, New Market, Clarke County, Va. The Civil War shut him out from the educational advantages which he would otherwise have enjoyed, and his education devolved upon his mother, a woman of cultivated mind and forceful Christian character. Apart from what she taught him, his education under masters was limited to twenty-one (21) months in private schools near his home. Deciding to become a Civil Engineer, he secured employment as axeman on the Winchester and Strausburg R.R. (an extension of the Baltimore and Ohio R.R. down the Valley of Virginia), entering upon those duties in October, 1868. From this humble beginning, he has progressed through all of the intermediate grades to that of Chief Engineer. With that rank he built the Chicago and Western Indiana R.R. and its off-shoot, the Belt Railway of Chicago. Later building the Chicago, Madison and Northern Railway. In June, 1893, he was made Chief Engineer of the Sanitary District of Chicago, and held that position during the construction period, resigning July 31, 1907. He was then made Consulting Engineer of the said District. This has been his most notable work. He was chosen by President Roosevelt in 1905 as a member of the Board of Consulting Engineers to determine the type of the Panama Canal, and was one of the minority of five whose recommendation of the lock type of canal was adopted. In 1909 he was selected by President Roosevelt as a member of the Advisory Board of Engineers which accompanied President-elect Taft to Panama. He has been Consulting Engineer for the following municipalities and city governments: The Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Commission, the City of Toronto on Track Elevation, the City of Baltimore on Track Elevation, the Baltimore and Ohio R.R. and others. He is chairman of the Internal Improvement Commission of Illinois, Engineer of Harbor Development, Milwaukee, Wis.; is past president of the Western Society of Engineers, member American Society of Civil Engineers. His religious affiliations are with the Episcopal Church, and in politics he is Democrat. Address: Home Riverside, Ill. Business: First Nat. Bank Bldg., Chicago, Ill., U.S.A.

RAWSON, Mrs. Maud Stepney:

Woman of letters. Born in Poona, India. Educated England and Germany. Mrs. Stepney Rawson is now living and doing all her work in the peace of the country. Her delightful, old-fashioned cottage, fragrant in summer with roses, is beautifully placed on the slope of the Berkshire Downs, and close to the stately beech woods. It is on the skirts of Streatley, one of the most famous and beautiful villages on the upper reaches of the Thames. An ideal spot to work in, remote from noise, yet not too far from London for literary research at the great Libraries. Mrs. Rawson is brimful of nervous energy and has a passion for work. Already she is forging ahead on a new novel of modern life, besides being engaged on a sixteenth century memoir. Her recreations are walking, an occasional game of Badminton, and helping in the local choral music. Both she and her husband are keenly interested in music. Mr. Rawson organizes, in fact, the principal music in the place, as he is a very able conductor of bands and choruses. Mrs. Rawson is also particularly enthusiastic about the Folk-Song revival movement. All Mrs. Rawson's family are artistic, and her father, whose instrument was the 'cello, found the music a great relief from his professional work He was Lieutenant-General Fife, of the Royal Engineers, very well known in his day in the Bombay Presidency as designer and executor of vast irrigation works in the Scinde Province. ROMNEY, Earl of: Charles Marsham:
Born Oct. 25, 1864. Owns 3,000 acres of land. The Earl and Lady Romney are seldom seen in society, preferring to lead a country life at Gayton Hall, their place in Norfolk, where they both hunt a good deal. The family to which Lord Romney belongs derives its surname from the town of Marsham, in Norfolk, in which county it held a high station so far back as the beginning of the twelfth century. In the reign of Charles I, Sir John Marsham was one of the six clerks of the Court of Chancery, and suffered much in the Royal cause. Sir Robert Marsham was raised to the Peerage as Baron Romney, in 1716, and a year later constituted Governor of Dover Castle. He married the eldest daughter and co-heir of Sir Cloudesley Shovel, the celebrated admiral. In 1799, the Baron Romney of that day had the honor of entertaining George III and Queen Charlotte at the Mote, his Kentish seat, when nearly 6,000 Volunteers were reviewed in the park. ROOSEVELT, Theodore:
Statesman. Former President of the United States of America. Mr. Roosevelt is one of the most striking world characters now living. As his surname shows, his paternal ancestry is Dutch. His maternal ancestry is Scotch. Mr Roosevelt was born in the Borough of Manhattan, N.Y. City, U.S.A., Oct. 27, 1858. He was educated at Harvard University. He held public office in the following order: Member of the New York State Assembly from 1882 until 1884; U.S. Civil Service Commissioner from 1889 to 1895; Commissioner and President of the Board of Police Commissioners of N.Y. City from 1895 to 1897; Governor of New York State, 1898 to 1900; Vice-President of the United States from March 4 to Sept. 14, 1901; President of the United States from Sept. 14, 1901, until March 4, 1905. He was elected to serve as Vice-President when the Hon. William McKinley was elected as President, and when, as a result of the assassin's bullet, President McKinley died, Sept. 14, 1901, pursuant to the organic law of the country, Mr Roosevelt was sworn in as President, to complete the unexpired term of Mr. McKinley. At the completion of this term Theodore Roosevelt was elected to the Presidential office, and served four years, being succeeded by the present incumbent, President Taft. Mr. Roosevelt is, in politics, a militant Republican. In whatever office he has held in the public service, many have questioned his wisdom, but none his integrity. He has been described by reputable authority as "the first genius who ever was President of the United States." Surely, his activities and earnestness are remarkable. One has only to read the titles of his books to appreciate the various interests of this man of strenuosity. He has written a history of the War of

SALISBURY, Marquis of: James Edward Hubert Gascoyne Cecil:
Born in London on Oct. 23, 1861. Educated at Etqn and Oxford. During his Parliamentary career, which extended over a period of eighteen years, first member for Northeast Lancashire and then for Rochester. The present Lord Salisbury held the responsible positions of Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs and President of the Board of Trade. When the South African war broke out Lord Salisbury, or as he then was, Viscount Cranborne, was one of the first to volunteer. This Branch of the Cecil family is descended from William Cecil, first Earl of Salisbury, who was the youngest and favorite son of Lord Treasurer Burghley. There is a curious mosaic portrait of the first Earl of Salisbury built into the wall over the fireplace in the library at Hatfield. Sir Henry Wotton wrote from Venice in 1609 regarding this picture: "I will take the boldness to advise your lordship that, having here caused your picture to be made in mosaic, as the best present I could conceive for my Lord of Cranbourn, your son, in humble acknowledgment of my great obligations to you, I have this week adventured it on a ship called the Thomas, of London, bound directly homewards whereof the master is one Gardiner, whom, that he might take a better care thereof, I have delivered, by intercession with the State, of some difficulty wherein he stood. The picture is made precisely according to the draught of that wherewith your lordship did honor me; and it is the workman's special suit and remembrance that it may be set in its true light, and at a little more height from the eye than a colored picture would require.' Address: 20 Arlington St., London, S.W., England.

SPENCER, Lord:
Born Oct. 27, 1855. English Earl. Fifth holder of the title. Few peers have held more responsible positions. He has twice been Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and twice president of the Council. The recent publication of the Beresford-Asquith correspondence, and the innumerable questions and discussions on Navy matters in the House recall Lord Spencer, for he was one of the most efficient First Lords that the Admiralty has known. He was in office under the Earl of Roseberry from 1892 to 1895. He increased the personnel of the Navy by 6,000 men; he solved the problem of providing a sufficient number of stokers; he increased the number of quick-firing guns; and he armed bluejackets and marines with magazine rifles. Last, but not least, he formulated a comprehensive program of naval construction, and began extensive harbor works at Dover, Portland, Gibraltar, the recently opened naval harbor at Dover being the fruits of his efforts. There is a curious account in Mrs. Delaney's diary of the marriage of the first Earl Spencer, then John Spencer, Esq., of Althrop, in Dec., 1755, to Margaret Georgiana Poyntz. The young people came up to town from Althrop in three coaches-and-six, accompanied by two hundred horsemen. The villages through which they passed were thrown into the greatest alarm by this cavalcade, some of the people shutting themselves in their houses, and others coming out, armed with pitchforks, spits and spades, crying that "the invasion was come," believing that the Pretender and the King of France were both come together. Margaret Poyntz was the daughter of Mr. Stephen Poyntz, of Midgham, Envoy Extraordinary to Sweden in 1724, characteristically described by Carlyle, in his "Frederick," as "a once bright gentleman, now dim and obsolete." Lord Spencer owns about 28,000 acres of land. Address: Althorp Park, Northampton, England.

SPENCER, Selden P.:

By hard work he was admitted to practice, in 1886, a year before his graduation from the Law School. Elected to House of Rep. of Mo., 1895-96, in which body he became Chairman of the Committee of Banks and Banking, Member of the Committees on Judiciary, Ways and Means, Militia, Rules, and Secretary and Member of the "Republican Steering Committee." At the general election, in 1896, was elected Judge of the Circuit Court. Since the expiration of his term on the bench, in Jan., 1903, has devoted himself to practice of law. Judge Spencer holds the following degrees: A.B., from Yale University; LL.B., from Washington Univ.; A.M. and Ph.D., honorary degrees, from Westminster College; and Hon. M.D., from Mo. Med. College. SPURGEON, Rev. Thomas:
Baptist clergyman. Until recently, president of the Pastor's College, London, and of the Stockwell Orphanage. Born in London, Sept. 20, 1856; son of the late Reverend Charles H. Spurgeon, the famous preacher of the Tabernacle, London. Educated under his father's direction at the Pastor's College. Before his ordination studied art. In 1877 made a tour in Australia and Tasmania. Two years afterward made another visit to the same country, and accepted pastorate of a Baptist Church at Auckland, New Zealand. In 1893 accepted pastorate of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London. He was forced to resign from this because of ill health. At fifty-one years of age Mr. Spurgeon started a new career in life, this time as a painter. He painted his first picture to beguile the weariness of convalescence after he had resigned the pastorate. His own explanation is as follows: "There was an old Landseer," he said, "hanging on the wall of my bedroom, and during my illness I tried my hand at copying it in water colors. At once I fell in love with the work, and since then I have painted with colors continually, in many parts of Europe. With the exception of some occasional advice from kind artist friends, I am entirely self-taught, and all I can claim for my pictures is that they have been a Godsend to me in keeping my mind occupied and my hands busy. My painting, besides providing just the sort of quiet open-air occupation which is good for my complaint, has kept me from grieving at being kept out of the hurly-burly of life." His literary publications are: "Gospel of the Grace of God," a series of sermons; "Scarlet Threads and Bits of Blue," a volume of poems; "Down to the Sea"; "Light and Love"; "God Save the King," and "My Gospel." Address: London, England.

STANLEY, Lady: Mrs. Henry Curtis:

Artist. Lady Stanley, whose memoirs of her late husband, Sir Henry Stanley, has just come out, has a life history of much interest. In the later eighties, the beautiful Miss Dorothy Tenant became known as an artist of great promise. Her pictures, which were studies of the London street arab, appeared on the line at the Royal Academy, and her parents, the late Mr. Charles Tenant and Mrs. Tenant, lived in Richmond Terrace, and gave some smart entertainments. In 1890, Sir Henry Stanley, the famous explorer, returned from his travels, and was received with almost royal honors in London. He and the then Miss Dorothy Tenant met at the house of the late Lady Burdett-Coutts. The attraction was mutual, the engagement speedy, and those of us who were present at that year's Foreign Office party can remember the triumphant progress through the rooms of Sir Henry Stanley and his handsome fiancée. The wedding was at Westminster Abbey, and was attended by the late Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Arthur Balfour, and Sir John Millais, the famous artist. And even now the guests relate how, when, owing to Stanley's sudden illness, the bride was led to her carriage by Sir John Millais, and the excited crowd cheered wildly, the great artist shouted: "I'm not Stanley! I wish I were—lucky dog!" "Lady" Stanley is now the wife of Mr. Henry Curtis, a distinguished surgeon. Her second marriage took place in 1907, and she retains her title by courtesy. Address: 2, Richmond Terrace, Whitehall, London, S.W., England.

STEAD, Robert J. C.:

Born Sept. 4, 1880, on a farm, in Lanark County, Ontario; youngest child, and only son, of Richard T. and Mary Stead. His father was of English, his mother of Scotch descent, but both were Canadian born. In 1882 the family moved west, and settled on a homestead near Cartwright, Manitoba, where young Stead's early life was spent, mainly in association with the prairies, then a vast and almost unbroken wilderness. It was, no doubt, these early experiences which determined his literary bent in later years, and have earned for him the sobriquet of "The Poet of the Prairies." At the age of twelve he was contributing prose and verse to newspapers, but it was not until 1903 that he won anything more than local recognition. In that year a short poem of his, entitled "The Empire Builders," dealing with certain aspects of Canadian development, struck such a strong and timely note that it was widely reprinted. In 1908 he published a volume of verse, under the title "The Empire Builders," which at once established his place in Canadian literature, being favorably reviewed by over 200 representative publications. A second edition of this volume was issued in 1909. The principal elements which have won distinction for his work are an easy style, a command of simple, unpretentious English, a strong patriotic note, and a keen and accurate portrayal of the subtle influences of pioneer prairie life. Married, in 1901, to Nettie May Wallace, and has one son. Spent eleven years in newspaper work, and is now secretary of the Alberta Automobile Co., Ltd., at High River, Alberta, Canada. Address: High River, Alberta, Canada.

STRAUSS, Richard:

Musical composer. Was born June 11, 1864, at Munich, where his early studies began; his father being first horn player in the orchestra of the Court Opera-house. Appointed conductor at Meiningen in 1885, from 1889 to 1894 he was Hofkapellmeister (with Edouard Lassen) at Weimar, and later conductor at the Munich Opera House. He has written many charming songs, but his distinctiveness as a modern composer is chiefly due to extraordinary elaborate instrumental works. A Richard Strauss festival was held at St. James' Hall in June, 1903, when "Ein Heldenleben," also "Sprach Zarathustra," and other symphonic poems from his pen were performed. His opera, "Salome," based on Oscar Wilde's work, has provoked much discussion.

his house at Basing the day after their wedding at Winchester, and in the summer of 1560 Queen Elizabeth paid him a visit there. Elizabeth was so much pleased with the good cheer he made her that she playfully lamented his great age, "for by my troth," she said, "if my Lord Treasurer were but a young man I could find it in my heart to have him for husband before any man in England." The first Marquess rebuilt Basing House, which he obtained license to fortify in 1531. He weathered the storms of four reigns, and used to boast that he had done so because he was sprung from the willow, and not from the oak. Address: Amport St. Mary's, Andover, England.
